

V- B. EFFECTS FOR DECISIONMAKING

INTRODUCTION

Landusers use many sources of information when deciding whether or not to change a management practice, or to adopt conservation recommendations. This subsection stores information, collected from various sources, about the natural resource, economic or social effects of adopting conservation practices.

Two sections are used. The first, Producer Experiences, documents on-farm research. The second, Other Effects Information, can include information gathered from university research, useful farm magazine articles, computer simulations or other information showing the effects of conservation recommendations.
