

Approximate Boundaries of Forest Ecotypes in West Virginia

This map shows the approximate locations of where the forest communities described in this evaluation are more likely to exist in West Virginia. It is meant only as a general guide to determine where certain forest communities could exist within the state. Boundaries shown are not distinct and may blend into adjacent communities. Small isolated areas may exist within other larger communities and are not shown. One or more ecotypes may occur in a given area, county, or watershed. Use only on-site data to determine the correct ecotype to evaluate habitat.
